It has .Dietary fat from palm oil has genotoxic effects and affects the immune system, endocrine system, reproductive system, and hepatic enzyme activities in male Wistar rats. The purpose of the study was to determine the effect of dietary fat from palm oil on tissue nutrient contents, hematological and biochemical parameters in male Wistar rats. Four groups of rats, each consisting of six animals, were fed on experimental diets containing 5% dietary fats from palm oil for 28 days. Results showed that there was a reduction in the rate of weight gain in group II, while a low plasma lipid profile and a high level of glucose was observed in group IV. A low protein concentration was also observed in group IV. In the group fed palm oil-containing diets, the hepatic genotoxicity (DNA damage assay), significant reduction in the level of testosterone, growth hormone (GH), androgen receptor (AR), and estrogen receptor (ER) α , and increase in the level of thyroxine (T(4)) was observed. The endocrine system was perturbed by the administration of palm oil in the diet, as shown by the significant reduction in the levels of serum prolactin (PRL), estradiol (E(2)), and follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH), and by a significant decrease in the level of ER α and PRL receptor. The same effect was also observed in the level of the leptin receptor (Ob-R). The percent weight gain in group II was lower than in group I and group III. There was a significant increase in the levels of lipid peroxidation, protein carbonyl, thiobarbituric acid reactive substances (TBARS), and oxidative DNA damage in group IV. This study indicates that dietary fats from palm oil in the diet can cause genotoxic effects on liver DNA. Moreover, palm oil fatty acids may lead to an endocrine perturbation in the form of a decrease in the level of hormone levels and hormonal receptors. The immunological implications of palm oil in the diet may cause a reduction in the specific activity of serum immunoglobulin and complement. The
