I have no intention of reinventing the wheel with this review. People who buy Photoshop, Lightroom, and other related software are a professional audience and are accustomed to finding out for themselves how great a product is, rather than having total strangers provide a superficial review. If they plan to go into this arena, they might as well do their homework. My review only scratches the surface of the many facets that make Photoshop a standout product. I experimented with an early version and found it to be fantastically powerful. For me, it is among the best in the world. I hope that this review will help those who do not have Adobe software. I also found that the review was more valuable than I expected. Therefore, Photoshop is a great choice for anyone who wants to look at and edit photographs in Photoshop. It is a complete toolkit for the modern photographer who wants or needs photo retouching. I first tested Aperture 3.0 and then moved on to Lightroom 3.0. The yearly upgrade has smoothed some rough edges but the end result is that they are, if anything, better than ever. I still love the Aperture experience but the only way for it to grow is by Apple taking the app source code and hand it to Adobe. Aperture has always felt like it was in a Silicon Valley startup – did they really need all those people? Did they really need every release? And how come Aperture didn't move to the Core Graphics? Why didn't it have a 64-bit version? Why did they change their creative engine? I have no regrets leaving Aperture but no doubt that I will use Lightroom for all my future projects. In the end it was just too good. So good that I didn't even bother to seriously trying CorelDRAW.
