The type of the second class changes at runtime, and the first class knows nothing about it. It is also not possible to generify because it is being built from a factory class that contains other objects. At some point in my code, I need to return a List of MyObject, where MyObject is the type of the original List. I've tried the following: public List GetMyObjects() { return new List(GetMyObjects()); } public IList GetMyObjects() { return new List(GetMyObjects()); } public IList GetMyObjects() { return new List(GetMyObjects()); } The only thing that works is the first version, but I don't want to introduce a dependency on specific types. Is there a way to make this compile? I would expect the C# compiler to be
